Research Methodology

The ACA2K in-country research methodology had two main components: a doctrinal review and impact assessment interviews. The doctrinal review, involving a survey of the national laws and regulations, allowed for an understanding of the current copyright regime. The impact assessment interviews were conducted with a range of stakeholders, including authors, publishers, libraries, and other organizations, to gather information on how the current copyright regime affects their activities. The combination of these two methods enabled the team to generate a picture of each study country's 'copyright environment' (the interaction between laws and practice).

- Country Reports

Each ACA2K country research team prepared a Country Report outlining the findings of the doctrinal review and impact assessment interviews (as specified in the ACA2K Methodology Guide).

- Executive Policy Briefs

As well as preparing a Country Report based on research results, each ACA2K country team prepared an Executive Policy Brief to highlight key findings and the legal, regulatory and policy recommendations that emerged from these findings.

- Comparative Review

The project also generated a Comparative Review report looking at research findings across the ACA2K study countries and making recommendations for possible ways forward.
